SUNDAY THOUGHTS

For all our differences, we humans have one thing in common; we all think we are right. We all think we have the answer and we base all of our values and decisions on it. The clashes and conflicts that result from the strength of our convictions can tear families and communities apart. Today's readings extol the virtue of wisdom. The attentiveness and awareness of the hostess Wisdom in the first reading is presented to us as a model. She does not shun those whom she does not consider to be her intellectual or spiritual equal, she invites them, but, crucially does not force them, to dialogue with her.

In the Gospel, Jesus does not become affronted when his listeners question his teaching. Instead he sought to explain it to them without demanding that they come over to his side of the fence. In our desire to be right and in our noble efforts to do right, we may find ourselves trampling on others as the attempt to do the same. The depth of our faith in particular can motivate us to share it with others. It is natural to want to impart to the world the belief that gives us joy and purpose. However, we must be mindful that we invite, not demand; that we are not affronted, but patient enough to explain.

The popular phrase 'You can't put an old head on young shoulders' is particularly apt in matters of faith, because in matters of faith we are all young. We are little children finding our way, discovering as we go, as puzzled as ever by the Christ who gives us his flesh and blood as food and drink, yet equally in awe and inspired to walk with him. There are others on this path. They are ahead of us, behind us, walking in the opposite direction, dawdling along the side. Wisdom teaches us that we can't all keep the same pace, but we can encourage and support our fellows.
